

I like the NJ law the way it is. I do not want unsolicited calls at my home or my business. thanks

Over 2.8 million New Jerseyans have already signed up for the Do Not Call Program (representing approximately two out of every three residential phone lines in the state). The program has been a resounding success; many residents report almost a 100 percent drop in unwanted sales calls. Most likely due to its success, the law is under a coordinated attack from telemarketers who want the ability to call people despite the fact they have already signed up to stop telemarketing sales calls.

The Federal Communication Commission has not yet decided if it will overturn New Jersey and other states' Do Not Call laws that are stronger than the federal program. Specifically, businesses want the ability to contact any person on the Do Not Call list who they have conducted business with during the last 18 months. The New Jersey law does not include this exemption.

Governor Codey is adamantly opposed to any weakening of the program. He is calling on New Jersey citizens to take a moment and click on the link below and file a comment with the FCC about whether they think New Jersey's law should be weakened.
